Mainstreaming Climate Change into NATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Climate change poses a serious challenge to the attainment of the Millennium Development Goals. It is a major challenge at both national, regional levels. It will certainly affect all ecosystems as well as all human societies in different ways and in different degrees. Integrating climate change as a crosscutting issue in development plans will protect hard-won advances made to date and to be made in the future in reducing poverty worldwide. Such an integrated approach will make development more resilient by reducing climate impacts and identifying development opportunities that may otherwise be overlooked.

CODEV International provides policy and capacity development services on climate change to support developing countries respond to climate change impacts and integrate climate risks into national planning.

Mainstreaming climate change in planning and decision making processes is a crucial tool to ensure climate change adaptation. This approach involves taking into account risks and opportunities while putting in place adaptation measures that are attuned to the long-term vision of development.
